The issue unfolded pretty much as anticipated. We did get some supportive amendment language but it's uncertain if we will be able to maintain it to the final ordinance. So we are still hustling on this one.

City Council Decriminalizes Street Vending, Lays Groundwork for Regulating Vendors

After a years-long struggle for recognition, street vendors in Los Angeles won a major victory Tuesday as the City Council voted to decriminalize street vending and laid out a compromise proposal for regulating vending within the city. Spurred by the possibility of street vendors being deported by the Trump administration for minor infractions, the Council voted 12-1 to decriminalize street vending. The vote both removed street vending from the list of misdemeanor violations and transferred jurisdiction over code violations to the city's Building and Safety Department and away from the courts. Both moves are designed to ensure that street vendors have no criminal records that could then be used by immigration enforcement officials to deport them.

Snap Inc. Opens Up Automated Bidding Platform

Ahead of its forthcoming initial public offering, Snap Inc. has unlocked its automated advertising bidding program to all marketers. The automated advertising program was launched in beta in October and initially restricted to 100 select brands, reports Recode. Now, to buy advertising through the bidding program a brand must work with one of Venice-based Snap's 15 ad tech partners who have permission to sell the company's ad inventory.

Airport Plans Up in Air?

JetBlue Airways is reevaluating its future plans for flights out of Long Beach Airport after the Long Beach

City Council last week rejected the airline's request to offer international flights. The council voted 8-1 to drop a proposal to fund the construction of a U.S. Customs and federal inspection facility, a necessary precursor to allowing carriers to offer international flights
